bail to answer the charge of murder in the first degree.

The case attracted much attention, because of the fact that Gardner had been permitted to give bond by a Justice in Lincoin Township, where the killing occurred, but when Prosecuting Attorney Hayes arrived at the scene he objected to the action of the Justice and had another warrant issued for Gardner.

The young men, with some others were Gardner drew a revolver and struck Crumpley with it, knocking him down, and then sheet him. Crumpley cut Gardner two or three times.
